Detentions

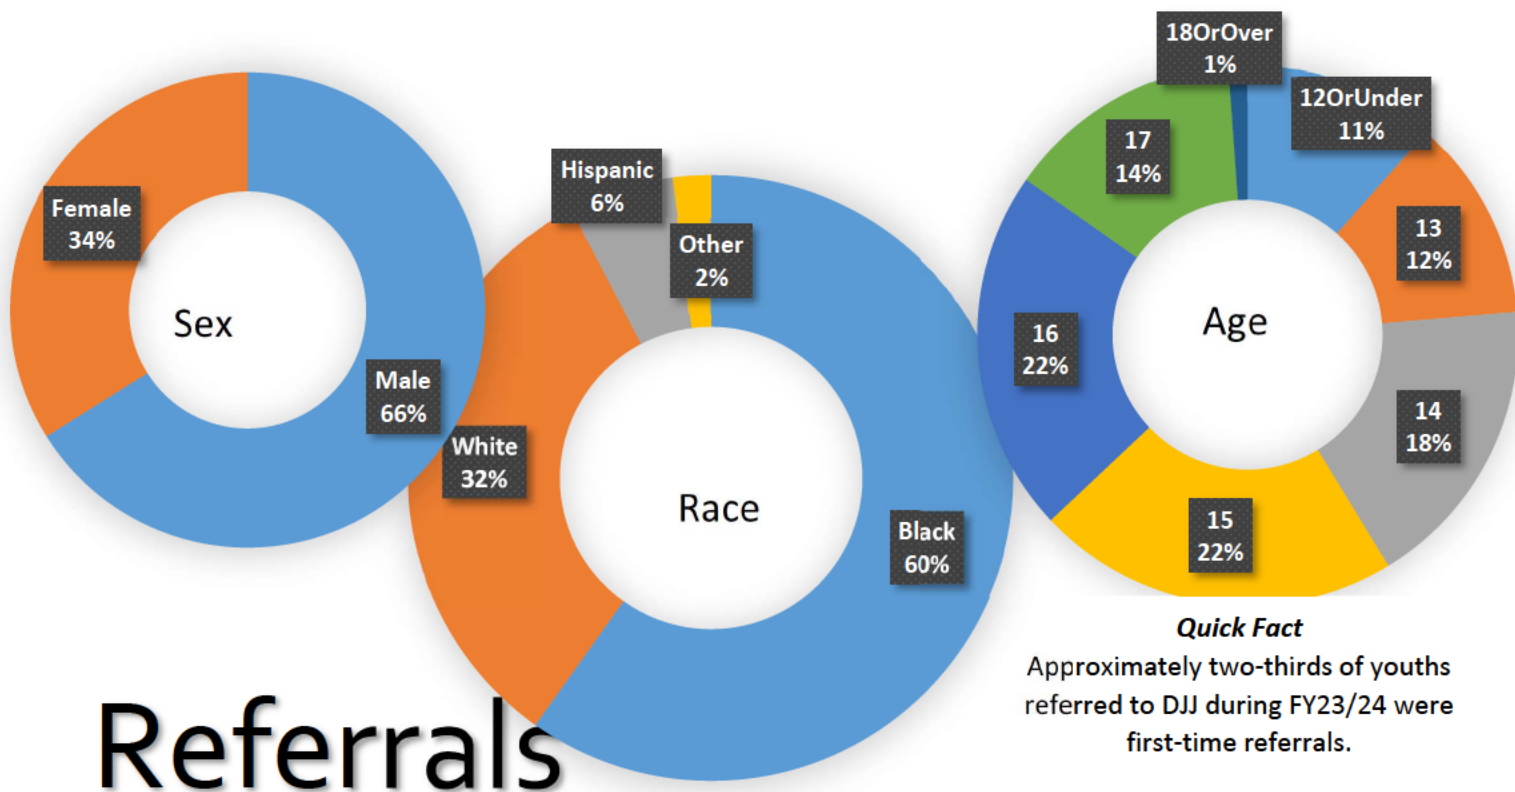

Youth facing more serious charges may be securely detained at DJJ's Juvenile Detention Center in Columbia (JDC), at one of three county-run detention centers in Greenville, Columbia, and Charleston, or a short-term facility prior to their adjudication. Youth may be detained before being formally referred to a DJJ county office (by law enforcement, for example). The average direct stay at JDC is 23 days, though this can vary widely. The maximum direct stay for a youth released from JDC in 23/24 was 825 days; however, the length of stay for some youths was just one or two days.

Youth usually enter the juvenile justice system in South Carolina when they're taken into custody by law enforcement or when they're referred to DJJ by a Circuit Solicitor or a school. At this stage, a youth is usually interviewed by personnel at a DJJ county office). Law enforcement might also elect to send the youth to a South Carolina youth detention center, pending a hearing.
